

Biography

Dr Pradip Deb is a Senior Lecturer in Medical Radiations, Research Supervisor and Radiation Safety Officer in the School of Health and Biomedical Sciences at RMIT University, Melbourne, Australia. He obtained BSc Honours and MSc in Physics from the University of Chittagong Bangladesh, MAppSc in Medical Physics from Queensland University of Technology, and PhD in Nuclear Physics from the University of Melbourne, Australia. He was a Melbourne University Research Scholarship recipient, and Australian Institute of Physics Bragg Gold Medal Finalist. Prior to RMIT University, he worked in the University of Melbourne, the Ohio State University, and the University of Tasmania. He received many academic awards including Student Choice Teaching Award, Teaching Excellence in Higher Education Award, Teaching Impact Award, SHBS Team Award, International Media Star Prize etc. His research interest includes nuclear models, radiation dosimetry, radiation safety and protection, and physics education. He has supervised 10 PhD students, and authored more than hundred papers, two research books, and 25 popular science books.